One way through

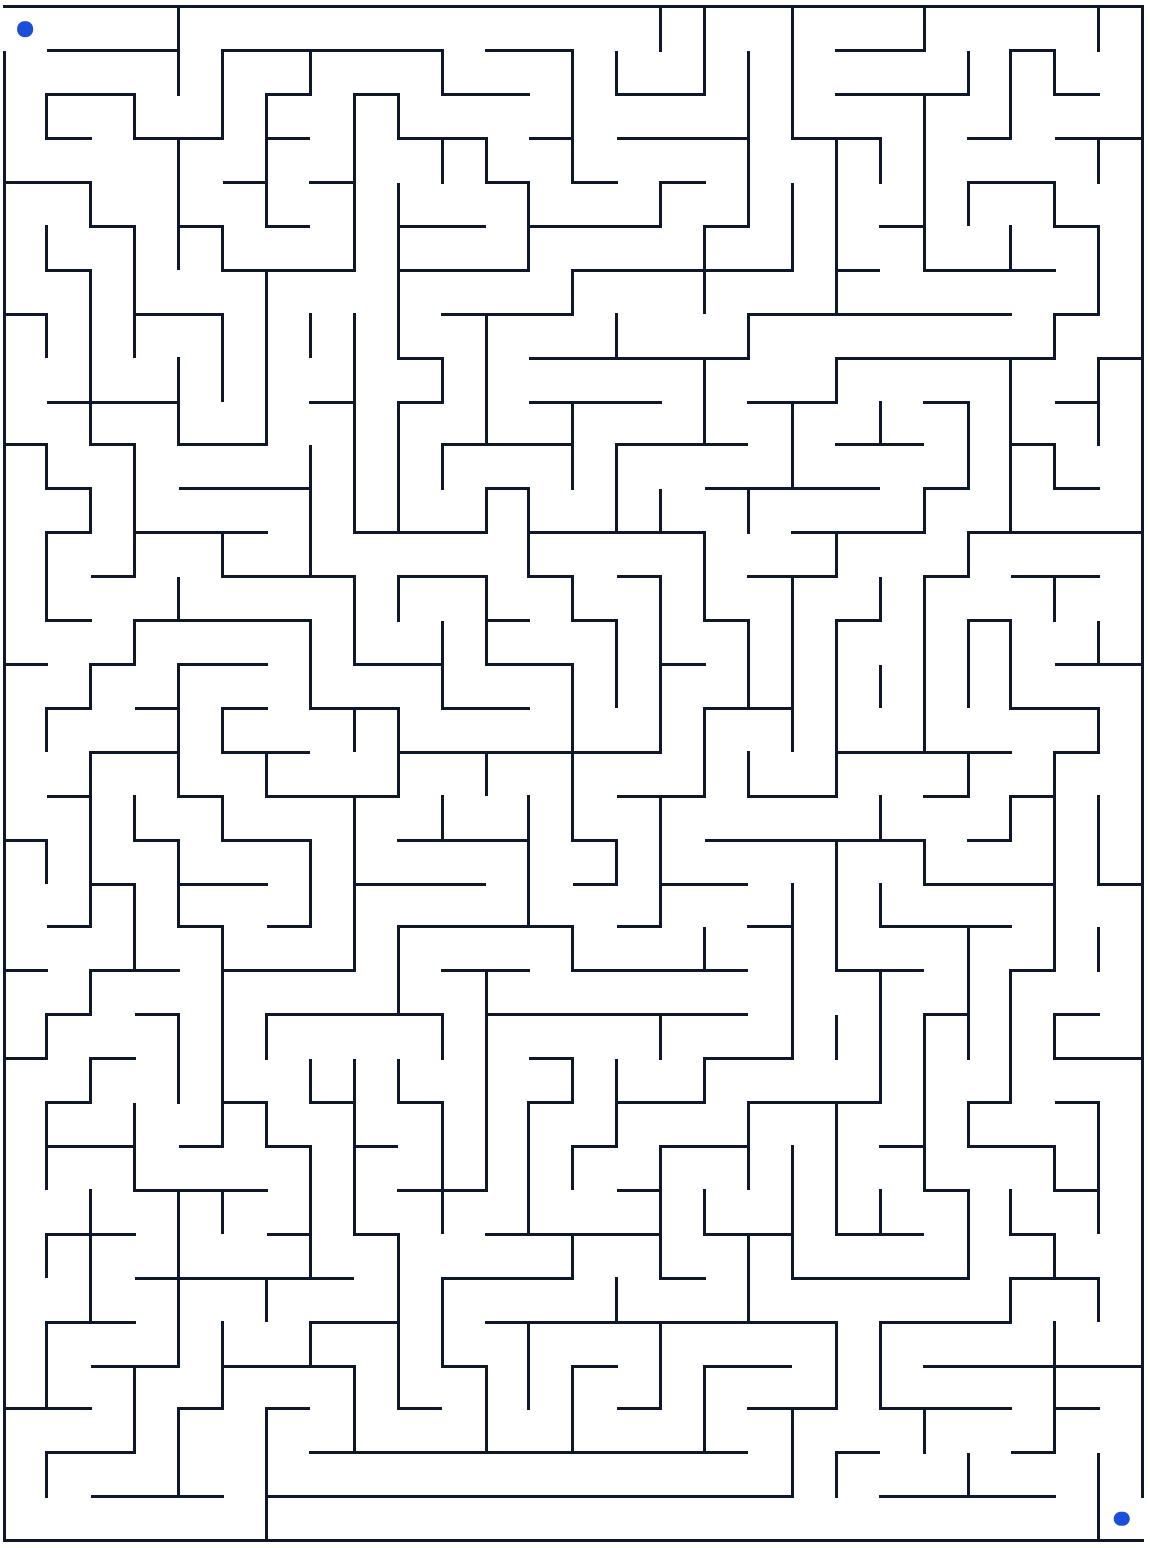

Every maze opens at the top left and lets you out at the bottom right, both marked with a dot. There is a route; the difficulty is in finding it, not in whether it exists.

On the classic setting there is exactly one route, which means you can solve the maze by putting a finger on one wall and never lifting it. The looped settings open some of the dead ends, so there is more than one way through and wall-following no longer works.

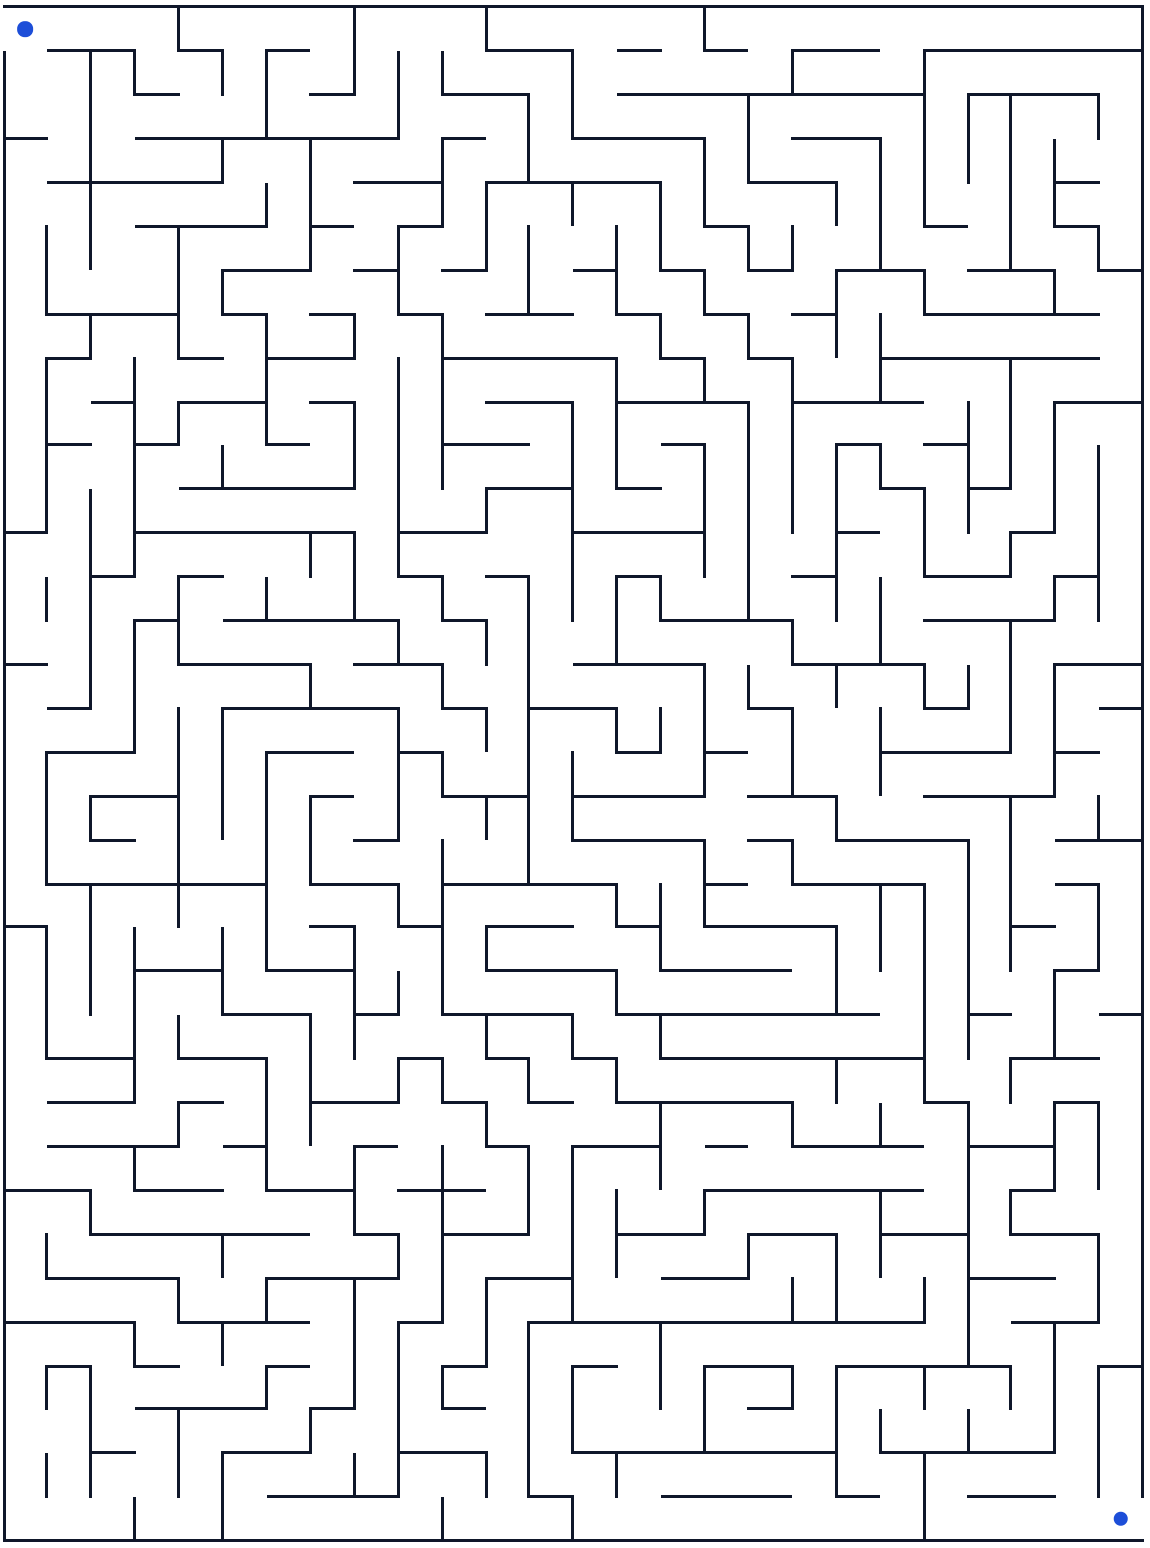

Solutions are at the back, with the route shaded rather than drawn, so you can check a maze at a glance without following a line across the page.
